Cardinal Gibbons on the Indian Schools.

The interview with Cardinal Gibbons in the Baltimore Sun, telegraphed to yesterday's INTELLIGENCER, will increase the high respect in which this eminent prelate is held by Americans without regard to religious affiliation.

While some-not all-of the Catholic writers who have entered into the controversy are imputing evil motives to Commissioner Morgan, denouncing as bigots all who do not agree with them and generally indulging in language the very opposite of temperate, this wise and thoughtful man, who stands at the head of the Roman Catholic hierarchy in the United States, administers a rebuke so plain and direct that everybody can understand it.

In calm, temperate, patriotic language the cardinal endeavors to reas sure those who have seen in the action of the commissioner a bigoted, intoler ant Protestant attempt to wreck the Catholic Indian schools. Undue importance, the cardinal says, has been attached to the controversy; the commissioner has taken the step "for the more effective expediting of the businesf of his department;" and the interests of the Indians will not suffer.

The Intelligencer has been taken to task for remarking on July 22: "The controversy is between the commissioner and the bureau and does not ne cessarily touch the schools under Cathlic coutrol." Cardinal Gibbons says: "I do not see how this change can in any manner affect the real interest of the Indians, and therefore it is much more benefited by good temper and forbearance and a disposition to waive minor points than by harsh criticism and intemperate speech." This is the INTEL LIGENCER's idea expressed with more

The cardinal says also that the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions has never obtained for itself or its employees one cent of the Government's money, has turned the Treasury checks directly over to the superintendents of the schools and has defrayed its own expenses by private contributions. This is to the point. It disposes effectually of the charge that the bureau has made money out of its relations with the schools and the Government.

The West has set up in the shoe manufacturing business for itself, and its been rudely awakened by a nightmare product is increasing. Wheeling is a large boot and shoe market. Our enterprising jobbing houses have built up a valuable trade that they are able to hold it against all comers. A large part of the goods in this line sold in Wheeling could just as well be made in Wheeling. Portsmouth, Ohio, has two or three successful shoe factories of increasing reputation. Other towns much smaller than Wheeling have prosperous enterprises of this character. Why not Wheeling? A concern with $50,000 capital could make a good beginning and this would lend to others. Here is something for our active business men to think about The more varied our industries the better for the whole community.

In the Ditch.

The stone bridge advocates have got the city into a big hole. The contract is let, the work is going on after a fashion and two-thirds of the bonds remain unsold after an earnest effort to sell them.

The ordinance authorizes a loan of $100,000 at four and a-half per cent, for the construction of this bridge. stone bridge will not be erected for $100,000. A good many well informed people will not be surprised if the cost be run up to $150,000. It may go beyond even this liberal figure.

Fifty thousand dollars would have put up, long before now, a handsome and substantial steel bridge with a solid brick-paved roadwaythat would accommodate all the traffic that a stone bridge will take. A fair idea of a good steel bridge is given by the structure of the Terminal Railway Company over

It is an inspiring spectacle-just the sort of spectacle to inspire the people with disgust.

Hill, Tammany and Whisky.

There are signs of a dissolution of partnership between Gov. Hill and Tammany of the first part and the liquor interest of New York city of the second part. It appears that notwithstanding all that the liquor interest is to and does for Hill and Tammany, "blackmailing of the liquor dealers by the police continues unabated."

Of course this is not only wrong, but ungrateful in the highest degree, for without the liquor men Hill and Tammany could not cut the swath they do. The New York Times, with full knowledge that Hill may be the nominee of the party whose Presidential nominee it will support because he will stand on a free trade platform, takes this molan-choly view of it: "The liquor trade is threatening to revolt against Tammany and Governor Hill be-eause it has failed to get from them what they promised in return for its support. It will be a sad day for Hill and Tammany when the liquor dealers go back on them.

The West Virginia Democrats who are helping on the Hill boom will have to keep their eyes on the indicator.

The New York Collectorship.

The change in the collectorship of the port of New York may not turn out just as the President's friends expect. Col. Erhardt administered the office well, but not to the satisfaction of ex-Senator Platt. Mr. Platt wanted a "pull" on the large patronage of the office. famous, at least with the fair and frail portion of our rapidly increasing population.

Dr. Gunn has proposed marriage to thirteen widows of Huntington and one in Guyandotte. He makes his proposition in a plain, business-like way. He calls on a lady, inquires if she is a widow. If she is not he tells her he can cure her of anything she may be suffering from just at that stage of the game. But it she is a widow there is when he works his strong graft. He says, in effect, his language embellished and adorned to be in keeping with the subject in hand, that he wants to marry her. In fact, he would like to get married at once. The widows have invariably turned him down, and his next spiel is simply to request to be directed to a widow who is matrimonially inclined.

So far the doctor has not found his widow. He is still hunting for her, however, and there is a gambling chance that there'll be a widow less in Huntington, and he'll have to kill no one, either.

POLITICAL MACHINE

Is What the New York Custom House Ha Been for a Long Time.

Nese York Times The Custom House since the founda tion of the Government has been used as a political machine by the adminisas a political machine by the auministration that controlled its patronage. The present generation has had abundant proof of this sintement. Since 1860 politics has ruied the Custom House as rigorously as under the defeaulting Collector Swartwout's regime.

Three weeks after his inauguration as President, Mr. Lincoln nominated Hiram Barney as the successor of the late ram Barney as the successor of the late Augustus Schell as collector, and by the Augustus Scheil as collector, and by the time Fort Sumter was fired on, not enough Democrats who had supported the Buchanan administration were left in office to man a mud scow. Barney was assisted in this work by one of the was assisted it its wor by one of the cleverest private secretaries who ever drew a resignation for an obnoxious employe, Mr. A. M. Palmer, who developed from one of the most tyrannical political bosses to one of the most successful theatrical managers in the country. Barney's measures were too harsh, how-ever, and he leaned too far toward the Chase contingent in the Republican party and was forced to give way to simeon Draper, who held office for bare-ly eleven months, when the lamented St. Lawrence county editor and United States Senator, Preston King, succeed-States Senator, Preston King, succeeded him states Senator, Preston King, succeeded him.

King, during a temporary aberration, loaded his pocket with shot one cold November night in 1865, walked aboard a Hoboken ferry, and when in midstream, jumped overloard. From that day to the following May Charles P. Clinch, brother of Mrs. A. T. Stewart, was acting collector, when the office was formally occupied by Henry A. Smyth, who held on during Andrew Johnson's administration. When Gen. Grant became President he called the merchant prince, Moses H. Grinneth, to the position, and a year later Thomas Murphy began his active political career in the office. Murphy, however, had a suit against the Government for supplies furnished during the war, and great pressure was brought to bear upon the President to remove him. With that characteristic devotion to his friends marked throughout his life, Gen. Grant. refused, but Murphy ten.

With that characteristic devotion to his friends marked throughout his life, Gen. Grant refused, but Murphy tendered his resignation voluntarily.

Grant allowed Murphy the courtesy of naming his successor. Murphy sugested General Chester Alan Arthur. For seven years Arthur filled the office with satisfaction to the merchants of New York irrespective of politics. With Alonzo B. Cornell he had organized one of the strongest and most cohesive political machines the country has ever seen. John Sherman, then as now an aspirant for the Presidency of the United States, and at the time Secretary of the Treasury under General R. B. Hayes, discovered that he could not swing the New York Custom House to Hayes, discovered that he could not swing the New York Custom House to his side of the fence and proceeded to smash the political organization that controlled it. Arthur and Cornell were removed. In six months' time Cornell was elected Governor of New York State, and in less than two years Arthur was nominated for the Vice Presidency of the United States, and in a little more than three years became President, while Sheriman was forced to content himself with his seat in the Senate.

A large number of the old road wagons being made in that locality, they were called Conestoza wagons, a name by which they are still known. The Couestoza wagon hind wheels were six feet three inches in diameter, with tire; front wheels, four feet, six inches; axle tree, four inches in diameter at point, and seven inches in diameter in back box; hub, about twenty or twenty-two inches in diameter; tires, four inches wide; the wagon bed was five feet high at the ends, sloping from ends to middle, where it was four and a half feet high. The bed was called an eighteen-barrel-bed, because eighteen flour barrels would stand side by side on the bottom of the bed, and a load was considered to be forty-six barrels for six good horses. From five to six tons was considered a good load for six horses on the pike. Many of the older men in this county, when young, were teamsters engaged in driving teams which were hitched to Conestoga wagons, and handled articles of commerce from Baltimore and Wheeling.
